The driver of a motorcycle flew over the handlebars and landed into the bed of a pickup truck after the two vehicles collided Monday afternoon on US 62 in Lawrenceburg.

First responders found Douglas Bater, 53, of Louisville in the back of the truck when they arrived, where they treated him while waiting for a helicopter to arrive to transport him to an area hospital.

Bater was listed in stable condition as of Monday night and is expected to survive, according to Deputy Patrick Beasley of the Anderson County Sheriff's Office.

A Lawrenceburg woman sustained what appeared to be minor injuries last Friday when the car she was driving flipped and landed on its roof on US 127.

Tonya Davidson of Beaver Lake Road sustained a cut on her arm and had a sore shoulder during the wreck. She was transported to Frankfort Regional Medical Center by Anderson County EMS.

Kentucky State Police Trooper Matt Rogers investigated the wreck, saying it appears Davidson's vehicle went out of control during a heavy rainstorm around 4 p.m. at the Anderson-Mercer county line.

"It was pouring down rain," Rogers said. "She told me she hydroplaned. When I saw the skid, it looks like she did a 180 and was traveling backward when she hit the embankment and flipped over on her roof."

Council ponders payroll tax

Topic surfaces during EDA meeting, director says it's 'nothing formal'

By Ben Carlson

A rumored payroll tax being considered by the Lawrenceburg City Council is a rumor no more.

Although the council isn't scheduled to vote on the idea of placing the tax on those who work within city limits, at least two councilmen have discussed it, including one with Mayor Edwinna Baker.

City councilman Ken Evans verified that he has discussed a payroll tax with fellow councilman Larry Giles, adding that the discussion originally surfaced during a recent Lawrenceburg/Anderson County Economic Development Authority

IRS scandal hits home for local couple

Kentucky 9/12 Project members join suit against agency

By Ben Carlson

The nation found out several weeks ago that the IRS has targeted conservative groups seeking tax-exempt status since 2010.

That news didn't come as a shock to a Lawrenceburg couple who, as members of one of those groups, said they've known about the targeting for at least the last two years.

Congressman: IRS used as 'political weapon'

Barr says he tried to help Kentucky 9/12 while running for seat

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Congressman Andy Barr said he has serious concerns about the IRS's admitted targeting of conservative groups and is demanding to know why it happened.

In town last week to meet and greet residents during lunch at La Isla, Barr said he started trying to get those answers even before he was elected to Congress last fall.

Barr, an attorney, said he wrote letters to the IRS on behalf of Kentucky 9/12 Project, demanding to know why the group was being targeted.

"I never heard back from them," Barr said. "Now, after the IRS has disclosed this problem, the American people are justifiably outraged, disappointed and saddened about two things.

"One, the IRS admittedly targeted Americans by using the agency as a political weapon. Two, it didn't disclose what it was doing, even though Congress had been asking questions for years."

Barr said he wants to know why the IRS did what it did.

"We need to let the facts meet us," he said. "We have certain facts ... we know Lois Lerner [director of the IRS Exempt Organizations division] knew about this and covered it up, and we know the director of the IRS was aware. We even know that Treasury officials knew and did nothing about it.

"What we don't know is how far up this goes, or why. The American people deserve to get to the bottom of this."

Barr serves on the Financial Services Committee, which he says is the umbrella over the IRS. He said the treasury secretary was "evasive" during recent hearings.

"I'm troubled by that," Barr said.

The IRS problems, he said, add fuel to his fire to repeal Obamacare.

"Obamacare requires the IRS to implement and enforce provisions of that law," he said. "I have no confidence in the IRS to fairly administer Obamacare."

Gene and Kathy Linzy have been members of Kentucky 9/12 Project for about 4 1/2 years, a group dedicated to preserving constitutional rights. The organization is one of 25 that filed suit last week against the IRS through the American Center for Law and Justice (ACLJ) in Washington, DC.

Gene Linzy said the group's attempt to get tax-exempt status began several years ago and was met by IRS officials with a barrage of what he said were inappropriate questions.

"They sent us a list of 88 questions and said we had two and a half weeks to answer them," Linzy said in a phone interview. "We didn't do it because the group's leadership decided the questions went beyond the norm and we decided not to comply."

"We contacted the ACLJ and got some advice."

That advice led to the lawsuit, which was filed last week against the U.S. Attorney General, Treasury Secretary, and Internal Revenue Service — including top IRS officials, according to a news release from Kentucky 9/12 Project.

The suit contends that the Obama Administration "unlawfully delayed and thereby effectively denied approval of Kentucky 9/12 Project applications for tax exempt status by means of a comprehensive, pervasive, invidious and organized scheme that purposefully established unnecessary and burdensome inquiries and scrutiny of Kentucky 9/12 Project applications based solely upon Kentucky 9/12 Project political viewpoints (or Defendants' assumption of Kentucky 9/12 Project viewpoints, based on their organizational names)," according to the news release.

The group's leadership lays the blame for the IRS targeting directly on the Obama administration.

"After being targeted and held hostage by this administration at the arms of the IRS for over two years, we want them to not only be held accountable but prevent this from happening to any other group or citizens in the future," said the organization's executive director, Earic Wilson.

"The IRS overreach and intimidation we experienced is a clear indication that this agency philosophically rejects the flow of authority crafted into our system of government," said Lisa Abler, the group's vice president. "Their arrogant actions run contrary to the concept of a government of the people instituted to secure inalienable rights with just power deriving from the consent of the governed."

Linzy, who has been an active supporter of a host of tea party-backed candidates, including Sen. Rand Paul, said the targeting of conservative groups may have helped President Obama win re-election in 2012.

"The tea party was really involved in the 2010 elections, but one thing we found out is that while it's great to have people out knocking on doors, we also needed money to support printed materials.

"That was the reason to go for [tax exempt status,] so we could start taking donations. I think that had the biggest effect because we weren't able to be as involved in 2012 as in 2010."

Linzy said he hopes the lawsuit ultimately brings an end to the IRS.

"Of course that's a pipe dream, but it's a problem when the IRS is used as a political tool to carry out punishment and extortion," Linzy said.

The lawsuit urges the court to find that the Obama Administration overstepped its authority and violated the First and Fifth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, the Administrative Procedure Act, as well as violating the IRS's own rules and regulations. The lawsuit requests a declaratory judgment that the defendants unlawfully delayed and obstructed the organization's applications for a determination of tax-exempt status by means of conduct that was based on unconstitutional criteria and impermissibly disparate treatment of the groups the ACLJ represents. The suit also seeks injunctive relief to protect their clients - and their officers and directors - from further IRS abuse or retaliation. Further, the lawsuit seeks compensatory and punitive monetary damages to be determined at trial at a later date, according to the news release.

TAX

city (EDA) meeting.

"Mr. Giles said something about it," Evans said, adding that he is against a payroll tax.

"We don't have any industry to justify it," he said. "With all of these kids working at McDonald's and other places like that, it amounts to a tax on them."

Giles said he has spoken with Baker, the mayor, about a payroll tax, but had heard only "bits and pieces" about the idea until just recently.

"There's some type of deal going on," he said, noting that Baker has a non-voting seat on the EDA. "I'm not sure how it materialized.

"My information is that the only way we are ever going to see industry is for that to be in place."

Giles said discussions he's heard involves enacting a 1 percent payroll tax, meaning a person working within the city and earning $30,000 a year would be taxed $300 annually or $5.77 each week.

"That's right next to nothing," Giles said.

One percent, it is estimated, would provide around $1.1 million a year to the city council.

George Leamon, director of the EDA, confirmed that the issue has been discussed during EDA meetings.

"Yes, but nothing formal," he said, adding that the issue was discussed during an EDA meeting last week.

Ricky Hawkins, who chairs the EDA, did not return messages seeking comment.

Giles said he has also discussed a payroll tax with Leamon, and asked him to consider making a presentation about the tax at a future city council meeting.

"I spoke with him and asked him if he could give us some facts and figures," Giles said. "He said, 'I can do that.'"

Leamon emphasized that the EDA has not taken any formal stand about a payroll tax, adding that if the EDA wants him to address the city council, he'd do it.

The notion of a payroll tax goes back several decades when county and city officials decided to place an insurance premium tax on residents instead of a payroll tax.

"From what I've heard when they passed the insurance tax it would have been better to look at a payroll tax," Giles aid.

The idea resurfaced early in former judge-executive Steve Cornish's administration, but never came to an official vote after residents and school teachers spoke out against it, saying it was unfair because it would tax only about a third of the county's residents.

Current Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway said a payroll tax isn't something he will even consider.

"I'm not in support of an occupational tax," he said. "Absolutely not, and it won't be on the bench as long as I am judge-executive. Not for any reason."

Giles said it's something the city council should at least consider to promote economic development.

"I've talked to the mayor about a week or so ago, and asked her what she thought," Giles said. "She said she didn't think the council would do it. I said it won't until you put it to them."

Giles said such a tax could be used to help recruit industry.

"It gives you cash money, and we don't have cash money of any kind that we could match funds with," Giles said. "We should be the hub of this area, so why aren't we getting some of the industry? We're set up with water and sewer ... it just doesn't make sense that we can't get anything here."

Coffee maker little help for needy kids

Explanation of new school job simply laughable

Column as I see 'em ...
Raise your hand if you think it's acceptable to use tax dollars to feed a hungry child.
OK, now raise your hand if you think it's acceptable to use tax dollars to clothe that child.
Now raise your hand if you're OK with using tax dollars to purchase that child's parents a coffee maker.
Hmm. Didn't think so.
Those who didn't raise their hand on the coffee pot question won't like what they're about to read.
Just last month, tax dollars under control of the Anderson County School District purchased a coffee pot, slow cooker, pizza pan and a host of other items for the parents of a needy child or two.
The buying didn't stop there. Along with some children's clothing items, also purchased was a bake ware set, 21 piece silverware set, a 12-inch wall clock, an alarm clock, a wooden spoon, a wooden fork, 16 piece glassware set and, to top it all off, some cookies and cream ice cream.
Those purchases were made in May by the school-based family resource center with state tax funds funneled into the school district.
Superintendent Sheila Mitchell verified that the purchases were made with those funds and, when asked, said she considers the purchases "appropriate."
The clothing items? Hard to argue with that. But given the resource center's own bylaws, which state, "funds may be used for welfare/basic needs after all other funding resources have been exhausted," it's hard to understand how the ice cream, pizza pan, coffee maker and other items are, to use Mitchell's word, "appropriate." Or how they fall under the "welfare/basic needs" requirement in the bylaws.
This isn't a screed against the family resource centers, which are overseen by good people trying to ensure that poverty doesn't get in the way of a child getting a decent education. The centers have plenty of latitude in what they do, including paying a family's late utility bills, if necessary. It's pretty difficult for a child to get ready for school without water or electricity, and most reasonable people would hate to see a child go without either.
But consider the above purchases. A photocopied store receipt I obtained from May 21 totaled $183.32. Of that total, only $55 was spent on children's clothing, including a few pairs of shorts, under ware, socks and a shirt. In other words, basic needs.
The $130 balance went for the stuff I've already mentioned, none of which comes close to the definition of "basic needs" in the sense that, without a coffee maker or tub of ice cream, the child's education would suffer.
Besides, it's hard to figure out how the parents (or guardians) couldn't afford a $10 coffee maker but are now able to afford coffee (at about $10 a can) to put in their new coffee maker.
The taxpayer funds for this program are doled out through the Cabinet for Child and Family Services in the form of a grant. When asked if coffee makers and such are what folks there had in mind when awarding these grants, a spokesperson would only say that the purchases are at the local agency's discretion.
That's fine, but with these funds being very limited, it might be best if that discretion were focused more closely on actually making sure families have what they need to ensure a child can succeed in school, rather than worrying if mom and dad have their morning cup of coffee.

Ben Carlson
Publisher

It's hard to understand how the ice cream, pizza pan, coffee maker and other items are, to use Mitchell's word, 'appropriate.'

Speaking of morning coffee ...
I laughed so hard I literally had some shoot from my nose as I read staff writer Meaghan Downs' report about the former high school principal's new job at the central office.
For a while I felt like I was reading a transcript of one of those nutty IRS hearings on C-SPAN, where those in charge seem to be making stuff up as they go along.
Reading the superintendent's spin that the position is the same position even though it has a different title and "similar but different" responsibilities got me giggling.
But the coffee really started squirting from my snout when I read the part of about what that position, which is new but isn't new, pays.
If you recall, the school board recently approved taking an extra $200,000 in property tax revenue for the coming year, laying it off as the only way to continue properly educating our children.
Of course school board members are quick to point out that the additional $200,000 isn't "necessarily" a tax increase, although basic math says differently.
Now the board has approved spending at least half of that amount —$88,000 in salary plus benefits is at least $100,000 — for the new position that isn't really new with money that hasn't been in the district's budget since 2009.
No amount of spin can conceal the fact that, 1) a new position was created and, 2) half of the coming tax revenue increase is going to pay for that position.
Remember that, folks, when school board holds a public hearing in a couple of months to increase its tax rate, and when your students complain about not have text books because "the district just can't afford them."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No good deed goes unpunished

To the editor:

You may or may not have heard the phrase, "no good deed goes unpunished" and wondered why would a good deed be punished? There seems to be so few good deeds advertised and so many horrific tales in the news. Unfortunately, I now have an example.

An 18 year-old boy was taking a walk in his neighborhood down Broadway (somewhere between Highland Avenue and Main Street) on the afternoon of Saturday, June 1 when he suddenly noticed a young blonde boy of approximately 7 years old running out into the street to retrieve his ball.

The young boy was not paying attention and did not see that a car was coming in his direction and was very close to him. The older boy immediately ran out into the street and grabbed the child out of harm's way. Unfortunately, since the child was not paying attention and did not see the car coming, he struggled and pushed the older boy, causing him to lose balance, fall into a ditch and hit his ankle on the edge of the sidewalk.

However, once the younger boy noticed the car going by and realized that he had nearly been hit, he apologized. He now looked scared because he realized he had been in danger and told the older boy that his mom had warned him about playing in the street. Frightened, the child ran off toward Main Street, supposedly in the direction of home.

The older boy limped the half a mile home on his swollen and painful ankle. He understood the younger boy's initial response of struggling at a stranger grabbing him, but was not sorry that he had helped keep the child safe. Unfortunately, he had paid the price of his good deed with a sprained ankle and a hairline fracture that will mean visits to an orthopedist and the wearing of a boot cast for the summer. Hopefully it will be better in time for the start of his first day of college.

I am very proud of my son for helping another person. He never thinks twice about doing so, even though it has caused himself physical damage. My only hope is that parents will read this and talk with their children about the dangers of playing in the streets and paying attention. Apparently this young child had been taught not to do so, but as parents we sometimes have to keep reminding them as they go out the door to play.

Drinking, driving and speeding on Ballard Road

To the editor:

Rest in peace, my sweet four-footed friend, Sophia.

She passed early [Monday] morning after being struck by a car. The driver did not have the courtesy to knock or leave a note.

She will be dearly missed by many on Ballard Road.

The issue I have here is two-fold. First, what has happened to common decency? When you kill a pet you have taken a member of a family. No matter the hour, you should knock and inform the owner or find them out. You should accept the consequences of your actions even if it is an accident, and the consequences include seeing someone in tears.

Second, people drive way too fast down this tiny country road. Sophia was a 125-pound dog, not much less than a person, let alone a child. My children play in the yard as do other children along Ballard. No, we don't let them play in the road. I have, however, seen on many occasions, teens walking Ballard Road.

School is out for summer; what if it had been one of them, unknown driver, would you have stopped and seen if they were injured or would you have kept driving?

Another disturbing thing I find often in my yard and along my property that borders the road are beer cans. This points to only one thing in my mind — people are not only driving too fast, some are doing it while they're drinking. Drinking and driving is illegal, not to put a damper on your party but to save lives.

As a community and as individuals it is up to us to step up to the line and not only make the call for common decency but to act with common decency, as well. As for Ballard Road, I make a personal plea to those who drive it to slow down a bit. It's summer, after all, and there are kids about, not to mention their four-footed friends.

Defend your garden's bounty with baby powder, onion spray

Happy June. I think I squeezed every minute out of May. I didn't get everything done, but I never do. For some reason, I keep thinking of new projects as I play in the garden. I did get some new trees in the ground to add a little color to the front yard. The next step is to landscape the front of the house. Oh boy!

Cheryl Steenerson
Columnist

I still have some plantings to do in the garden, but then all I have left is the mulching. Mulching with newspaper and straw around the garden plants keeps the weeds down and moisture in the soil. That saves me tons of time. I use some of that time to admire the place that I am in.
I recently had a conference call meeting from my home. I literally sat in the front yard looking out over the hay fields and woods. I watched my neighbor cut the hay field, row after row, transforming the field to a manicured lawn. In the field above, the cattle lazed and grazed. I snapped a picture with my phone and sent it to the Louisville office with the words, "My seat at the table." I couldn't resist.

I've been checking my evergreens and trees for bagworms, but haven't found many this year. I like that! All I have to do is hand pick them off. If you have an infestation, then find some Dipel or Thuricide to spray as a biological control.

Rumor has it, and I can confirm it, the flea beetles are out in droves! The leaves on my potatoes look like they have been shot full of tiny holes. The flea beetles are very tiny bugs with big hind legs (so they can jump high) and they can be black, brown or metallic -blue in

I use sprinkled baby powder on the leaves. It's my version of Seven Dust. I also use my smelly onion and garlic spray. Keep in mind that heavy dew and rain will create the need to reapply or spray regularly. The bugs don't just leave your garden. They're like the mail man, they keep coming back to check. So use protection!

If you haven't gotten your garden in yet, don't fret. There is still time, but you better hurry if you want to pick by September. June is also the time to start planting the fall pumpkin and winter squash seeds as well. We now have three full months of hot weather to look forward to. I can hear my friend Tara groaning right now. Some folks love the heat, some love the cold. Variety is the spice of life!

With all this beautiful warmth, we need the clouds lutely nothing about robots, except for the sentient bodies of angsty metal that rise to enslave humans in movies.

Students involved with our local LEGO Legends group taught me two things during brief conversations Monday afternoon:

First: The LEGO Legends teams don't work with the kinds of robots I'm familiar with.

Second: These students can use the things they learn with programming robots to help real people.

So, take that, Meaghan. Technically, robots are not involved in assisting with Quetzal's real-life problem, the problem her team chose to find a solution for as a part of their robotics competition this winter.

This LEGO Legends project requires a sensor on the Alzheimer's patient's door, and a speaker set up in the outer hallway.

And something called a radio frequency identification device (RFID), a small inexpensive tag that seniors could wear as a bracelet or necklace.

When the Alzheimer's patient passes his room, Quetzal explained, the RFID signals the sensor on the door, unlocking it and playing a familiar tune from the speaker.

A song the patient would remember. Maybe the Beatles, Quetzal said.

Quetzal and the rest of her LEGO Legends Next Generation team — Isaac Adams and Andrew Gowan — presented their idea to staff at The Lantern, an assisted living facility in Frankfort.

The team said they're not sure if the facility will implement their plan, only because it could get expensive with the sensors and speakers.

Still, pretty cool.

And the judges at Western Kentucky University liked their plan enough to help the team win first place.

Both LEGO Legends teams both won first place at the state robotics competition this past winter, actually.

Part of the competition involves a "real-life" component, a use of students' engineering smarts and imagination applied to an existing problem.

One of the LEGO Legends teams refers to their "real-life" project simply as "Mr. Clay's steps."

Mr. John Clay is a farmer from Franklin County. He's in his 80s, and because of arthritis, could not easily climb into his tractor to do his job.

"So he can't lift his foot very high," a member of the First Generation LEGO Legends team Zach Wentz, 12, said.

The three boys — Wentz, Brandon Gowan and Eric Adams — spent about four to five months last fall designing steps for Clay to use for his tractor.

At first they thought of a ramp (to be honest, I did too).

But a ramp, they quickly learned, required a foot of length for every inch of rise. Not very useful in helping Farmer Clay.

They visited the farm

many times, along with members of the Kentucky State University research farm and Kentucky AgrAbility, a partner with UK Extension Service that offers education and technical assistance to agriculture operators with disabilities.

The team had the CAD drawing ready to go and were planning on building the steps this spring.

Unfortunately, Clay's conditioned worsened to the point where he couldn't use any kind of steps, let alone the steps they designed.

Because of their attention to Clay's problem, the boys said, AgrAbility gave Farmer Clay a hydraulic lift to get into his tractor.

Not that the design will go to waste.

"I'm pretty sure the steps would work for someone else," Wentz said.

The boys said it was a little disappointing not to be able to build those steps for

Want to build a robot?

LEGO Legends, along with Anderson Community Education and the University of Kentucky, will be offering two workshops this summer:

2nd annual robot camp

When: July 16-19

Where: Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg

For: girls and boys, ages 9-14

Time: 9 a.m. to noon

Cost: $100, only 20 spots available

Participants will learn how to design and program robots.

Camp Aqua-bots!

When: June 17-21

Where: Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg

Time: 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Cost: $200, some scholarships are available

For: girls entering 7th-11th grades

This robotics camp, designed to engender an interest for girls in engineering, will involve participants learning how to create and program an underwater robot. Only 20 spots are available for the Aqua-bots camp.

Contact Jacque Zellar at 502-839-3754 for a registration packet for either robotics camp.

Mr. Clay like they planned.

But that doesn't mean they're done building anytime soon.

Wentz said he wants to work with wood and nails; he likes working with the materials.

Eric Adams wants to be a computer programmer.

As for Brandon Gowan: he wants to design bridges and roller coasters.

Of course, there is this year's competition coming up.

Not sure how a roller-coaster will apply to the 2013 competition theme of Nature's Fury, featuring natural disasters like tornadoes, earthquakes and hurricanes.

But I'm not one with the engineering imagination here.

to gather and drop some wet, on a weekly basis. I have three weather sites that I visit on the Internet: Wunderground, NOAA and Accuweather. I watch the radar, the high and low pressure systems, and above all I watch the jet stream. That is what moves the weather. They say the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. I believe the jet stream is the tool used to do just that.

Those of you who don't watch the weather so closely may want to depend on Mother Nature to give you a clue. Besides dark clouds moving in to give you a hint, you can also look at the flowers and dew and spiders and flies and cows in the field. Here are some tips to give you hope for rain within a few minutes or hours.

Dandelions will close their blooms before a rain. Spiders won't make webs that day. Flies will swarm windows and flat surfaces and cows lay down in the fields in the day. Ben Franklin, or Poor Richard if you like, had a saying about the dew. "Three days dewless be, twill rain you're sure to see."

We need an inch of rain a week for the garden and the landscape to grow. If we don't get the rain, then use the hose once a week for a deep soak. Frequent brief, shallow waterings with the hose only develops shallow roots. This is Anderson County. We need deep roots and strong ties for all living things to be healthy.

Now, today is World Environment Day. Find a way to strengthen your ties with the earth and develop healthy relationships with creatures from all walks of life. A front porch swing with a great view, a good friend and a bowl of fresh strawberries fits the bill. Put a smile on your face and a song in your heart, because .... you are still here, and I for one am very grateful. Happy Growing!

Frankfort Regional hosts grand opening of $8.4 million emergency department

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

When Karen Wooldridge first came to work at Frankfort Regional Medical Center, the emergency department only had six beds for patients.

Now, after completing the $8.4 million Emergency Department renovation, Frankfort Regional has increased its number of beds from 18 to 28 enclosed private rooms, added 2,600 square feet and a new $1 million 64-slice CT scanner.

Wooldridge, the director of emergency and cardiac services, thanked her staff for their work and patience during an emergency department grand opening held last Saturday.

The emergency department officially opened for patients in September 2012 in the first phase of Frankfort Regional's renovation. Staff often worked in two separate facilities during the 18 months of construction as the three-phase project neared completion.

"They have continued to provide quality care to our patients," Wooldridge said of emergency department staff.

According to Brad Wands, director of business development, Frankfort Regional's emergency department saw about 31,416 patients last year.

Frankfort Regional Medical Center has averaged 5,685 visits from Lawrenceburg residents over the past four years, equal to about 18 percent of total ER volume, Wands said via e-mail.

"We love it," Lawrenceburg resident Amy Lewis, an emergency department technician at Frankfort Regional, said. "It's been a long time coming. I think the community deserves it."

Lewis and fellow Anderson County resident Jennifer Shuttlesworth, a registered nurse in the emergency department, were volunteering Saturday for the medical center's second Kid's Safety Day event.

Held in honor of the late Charlie Semones to increase child safety awareness, Kid's Safety Day featured stations to check child safety seats, a bike safety course, pool safety and more.

Frankfort Regional receives highest rating for patient safety

From staff reports

Frankfort Regional Medical Center received an "A" rating for the second consecutive report on patient safety from The Leapfrog Group in its Spring 2013 report card - Hospital Safety Scores, according to a press release.

The score reflects Frankfort Regional's overall performance in keeping patients safe from infections, injuries, and medical and medication errors. Frankfort Regional also received an "A" rating in the previous report in November 2012, according to the press release.

There were 2,514 U.S. hospitals receiving grades, 45 in Kentucky. Frankfort Regional Medical Center was one of only four hospitals in Central Kentucky to receive an "A," and one of only 13 in the state. Leapfrog does not grade specialty or pediatric hospitals, according to the press release.

The Leapfrog Group, an independent, national nonprofit organization that administers the Score, graded hospitals on an "A, B, C, D, or F" scale based on 26 measures of publicly available hospital safety data to produce a single grade.

The Hospital Safety Score is the only publicly accessible standard of hospital safety available free to the public, according to the press release.

Calculated under the guidance of Leapfrog's eight-member Blue Ribbon Expert Panel, the Hospital Safety Score methodology has been analyzed in the peer-reviewed "Journal of Patient Safety," according to the press release.

To view the score for each U.S. hospital, go to www.hospitalsafetyscore.org.

Superintendent: Outgoing principal's new job not new position

Fields resigns from high school, named 'director of district-wide programs and operations'

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

Former Anderson County High School principal Ronnie Fields will continue to work in the Anderson County school district as a “director of district-wide programs and operations” starting July 1. Fields resigned from his position as principal on May 21, and the principal vacancy was announced May 29. Fields had been the principal at Anderson County High School for the last three years. According to Superintendent Sheila Mitchell, Fields’ director position involves some of the same responsibilities as an assistant superintendent, but with a different title and salary.

The district’s last assistant superintendent, Larry Basham, retired in 2009 and the position has been vacant since that time. “This is not a newly created position, just a position that has been vacant with a title change and similar but different job duties,” Mitchell said via e-mail. The school board voted to update the job description for the director of district-wide programs and operations during the May 20 board meeting, she said. Fields will not be the superintendent’s second-in-command in Mitchell’s absence, a role an assistant superintendent would be required to fill. Rather, Fields will be responsible for buildings, grounds, safety and security for the district including conducting monthly safety audits, she said. Mitchell said no new school safety policies have been put in place as a result of the filled director position. According to the job description, the director of district-wide programs and operations will also serve as a “school liaison” for outside community agencies such as law enforcement, emergency management, hospitals and fire departments. Fields will also be the Safe Schools Coordinator, overseeing safety plans for central office, adult/community education, schools, transportation and maintenance. Other responsibilities for the director include supervising district programs in the areas of “facility, safety, vocational education, adult/community education, alternative program, resource officers, daycare programs, board vehicle usage and communication/public relations.” Fields will also be the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) coordinator. The job description also notes Fields’ director position reports to the superintendent. As she considered putting someone in the role of director, Mitchell said she asked

Chief Financial Officer Nick Clark to include funding for the director position for the 2013-2014 school year. The director’s position salary is $88,155.15 for the year, according to Mitchell. “With all the unfortunate tragedies that happened, we wanted someone who could focus on safety and security for our school district,” Mitchell said of Fields’ new administrative role at the Board of Education. The site-based decision-making council at Anderson County High School is scheduled to meet this Wednesday to begin the selection process for a new high school principal to replace Fields, according to Mitchell.

New company offers conceal carry classes and so much more

By Ben Carlson

As Americans continue to arm themselves in record numbers, two Lawrenceburg men want to make sure that, locally, those buying and carrying guns do so safely and effectively. Jeff McCormick and John Giles have formed M&G Tactical, a company dedicated to teaching people to defend themselves that goes beyond being certified to carry a concealed firearm. “We’ve decided to do something we like doing,” said McCormick, a former officer with the state’s Fish and Wildlife Service who served on the international police force in Kosovo and with the Department of Defense in Qatar and Iraq. “We want to pass along our experience and training to the public, and are big proponents of the 2nd Amendment. Our goal is to properly train those who wish to carry a firearm. Giles, who served 20 years on active duty as a Kentucky State Police trooper and is now a police officer in Versailles, said M&G Tactical will offer standard conceal carry certification classes, but also a host of techniques that go well beyond the basics. “We also offer basic firearms training, advanced firearms training and personal safety and awareness,” said Giles, adding that it’s imperative that those carrying firearms understand how to maintain control of their weapon during an altercation. Giles said another focus is to teach gun owners how to keep their homes safe. “That’s a big concern for a lot of women, especially single women. In conceal carry classes, we talk about the use of deadly force and how to fire a weapon, but when you’re put on the range you certify by hitting the target just 11 of 20 times. “That’s where the advance classes come in. We teach proper handling of the weapon, being proficient with it and how to retain it while under duress.” M&G Tactical will offer its first conceal carry class June 22 for ladies only, McCormick said, at its shooting range in the Nonesuch community of Woodford County, about 30 minutes from Lawrenceburg. The Anderson County sheriff's office held its annual DARE fishing derby last Saturday, giving families living in and out of Anderson County the opportunity to have fun fishing while interacting and communicating with each other.

"It's always been a great event and the kids have fun doing it," Lawrenceburg native Tyler Moore, who brought his four children to the derby, said.

Children of all ages were offered the opportunity to fish, some for the first time. The anglers of the top three largest fish were given consolation prizes at the end of the day.

The derby has been so successful that police offices from surrounding counties are taking hints to improve their own fishing derbies.

Billy Whitenack, the chief of police at the Harrodsburg police department, brought his family and grandson, who lives in Anderson County, to the event in an effort to not only have a good time but to get ideas to improve the Harrodsburg DARE fishing derby as well.

"It (the derby) helps kids to stay out of trouble," Whitenack said, "and gets them of the video games and out of the house so they can interact with each other and their families."

Ten-year-old Logan Jackson of Frankfort cuts a Blue Gill from his fishing line after successfully reeling it in. Jackson attended the event for the first time this year with his father.

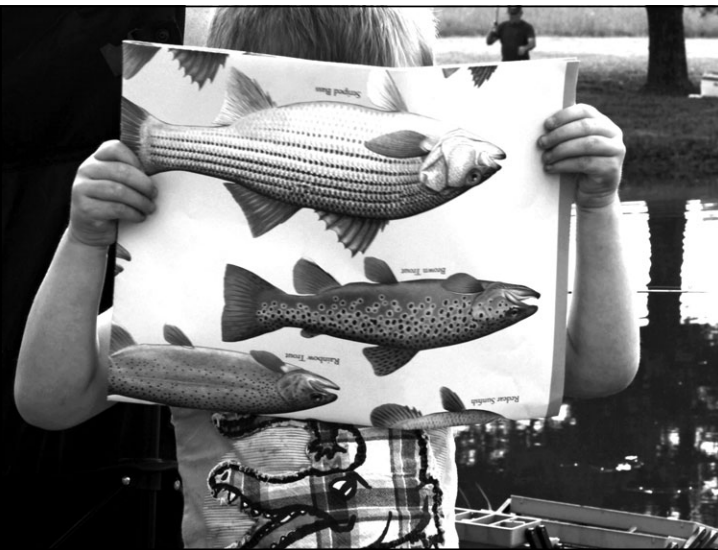

Allie Womack, 2, tries fishing for the first time, but quickly loses interest and looks for something else to pay attention to.

Isaac Andrews, 5, shows off one of the fish he caught during the derby.

After seeing the event in the newspaper Matt Bullock decided to bring his 3-year-old daughter Brooklyn to the Derby.

Two-year-old Wesley Garland examines the poster of Kentucky fish he received.

Chief, sheriff say incident a reminder of job's dangers

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Several local police officers attended the funeral last Friday for the Bardstown police officer who was shot to death May 25 on the Bluegrass Parkway. The death of Jason Scott Ellis, 33, of Chaplin, also served as a reminder for local police just how dangerous their jobs can be. "It's one of those things we know we can face at any time," said Lawrenceburg Police Chief Chris Atkins. "Really, it should slap us in the face and remind us that this is what can happen at any time. "For whatever reason we've chosen this job, this is the danger we face ... people will do anything." "If anything it's a reminder not to take anything or any situation or call for granted," said Sheriff Troy Young. Deputies Cody Slone, Alan Robinson and Brian Boggs attended on behalf of the sheriff's office. City officers who attended were Lt. Mike Schell, Sean Wells, Joe Saunier, Nathan Doty and Clay Crouch. The investigation into Ellis' murder is ongoing and being conducted by the Kentucky State Police.

In a news release issued last Thursday, police confirmed that Ellis was ambushed after removing debris from the roadway on the exit 34 ramp of the Bluegrass Parkway early that morning. Ellis was shot multiple times while removing the debris, according to the news release, and investigators weren't certain if he, or any responding police officer, was the target of the attack. State police are asking for the public's help in solving the murder. "Anyone who may have been in the area on the day of, or any day prior that may have seen or heard anything at where this occurred is asked to come forward," police said in the news release. "It may have been a car parked on the ramp, people walking or standing around a day or a few days prior to the shooting. Anything that seemed out of place or unusual may be the tip we are looking for. "The smallest detail that may not seem important to a lay person may be the one detail we need to bring someone to justice." Anyone with information is asked to visit www.kentuckystatepolice.org and follow the links to e-mail a public affairs officer.

Comfortable and stylish Christianity won't save anyone

According to a recent Gallup poll, more than 75 percent of Americans say that religion is losing its influential ground in our society. How can this be, especially since we live in a nation where we have more than 300,000 congregations that identify themselves as "Christian" and over 75 percent of Americans who identify themselves as "Christian"?

Brian Owens
Faith columnist

The reality is that the secularization of society is happening at a break-neck pace. Massive moral-shifts are taking place as the worldviews of our friends and neighbors become increasingly irreligious. While many may identify as Christian, when you try to pin them down on a particular doctrinal or social issue their beliefs often betray their identification with Jesus of Nazareth as being more of a longing for the nostalgic rather than self-denying discipleship.

Pseudo-spiritual is a more accurate descriptor of our current religious state-of-affairs. It is true that people are looking for purpose, direction, wholeness and happiness. However, the success of books that promise that you can live your best life now speak more to the emptiness in the hearts of the readers rather than to the soundness of the book itself.

Americans shop for religion like teenagers shop for jeans: style and comfort mean more than durability. This is precisely why religion is losing influence. Those designer jeans may look good on you now, but how will they hold up under the wear and tear of everyday life? How will what you believe about God sustain you when you stand in the rubble of what used to be your home after a tornado? How will what you believe about eternal life give you hope as you stand by the grave of your child? How will what you believe about the church encourage you when your spouse walks out on you? I could go on, but my point is this: the reason that the religious outlook of America looks so bleak is because people want a religion that is void of a God who is sovereign, of Bible that is authoritative, of a morality that is absolute, and of a Christ who is exclusive. The cause of the diminishing influence of religion in our society is that it is all style with no substance; it lacks any power to affect change in people's lives that goes beyond the superficial.

The Apostle Paul, writing to Christians in Rome, said "I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God for salvation to every-one who believes, to the Jew first and also to the Greek" (Rom. 1:16).

The power behind the Gospel was not an abstract philosophical concept but a person - Jesus Christ. The power was seen in his life and death - both of which were on behalf of sinful humanity - in which he defeated sin and death.

We don't need religion to be more influential; we need the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Charles Spurgeon once said, "After the gospel has been found effectual in the eternal salvation of untold multitudes, it seems rather late in the day to alter it; and, since it is the revelation of the all-wise and unchanging God, it appears somewhat audacious to attempt its improvement." The Gospel does not need to be improved; it just needs to be believed. And with belief in the Gospel comes all the promises of God, none of which have ever been broken.

Calvinistic Theology (3) - Unlimited Election

Calvinism teaches that since many cannot find salvation upon his own study, God has elected certain individuals unto salvation before the foundation of the world. We are to understand that this election was not based upon the sinner's response or obedience. It is not the sinners choice to accept God's word, but God's choice to give him faith that he might be saved.

The Bible teaches:

1. Jesus will save all who believe (Heb. 5:8-9).
2. All mankind has a choice to respond in obedience to the gospel message (Titus 2:11; Matt. 28:18-20; John 3:16).
3. Conditions must be met in order for one to be saved.
  - a. Salvation is conditioned upon a person living in subjection to the word (Matt. 7:21-23).
  - b. Hear, believe, repent, confess and be immersed.
4. God is no respecter of persons (Romans 2:11).
  - a. If the doctrine of unconditional election is correct, God is a respecter of persons.
5. God chose the realm of salvation (Eph. 1:4).
  - a. God chose saints to be in Christ Jesus. God chose the place of salvation and not the person.
  - b. He also teaches how one is in Christ (Eph. 1:13-14; Gal. 3:26-27).
